

PEOPLE-LED SOLUTIONS

Marlesha Woods, one of the 2892 Louisville storytellers, interviewed several community leaders who are contributing to the community with a "people-first" mindset and "people-led" solutions. What do you think this means? What does it look like when organizations do not put people first when they make decisions or take action? Consider three issues relevant to your community about which you care deeply. Using the process below (problem, person, proposal), explore how these issues might be solved by focusing on people first and foremost. Use these questions to guide you: What is the problem? Whom does this problem affect most, and how might they view the problem? What solution might you propose, with their perspectives in mind? (Even better, take the time to ask them before you propose a solution!)
