

WHAT CAN'T WE GOOGLE?

Marlesha Woods, one of the 2892 Louisville storytellers, interviewed a community elder named Kathryn Higgins. Ms. Higgins shared experiences she'd had within the Louisville community that may not be represented in traditional outlets. Ms. Higgins said, "You can't Google this stuff." Do you think there is vital information or important stories we may be missing? Why do you think some information or stories are valued more than others? Why do you think some perspectives are shared more than others? Consider a topic relevant to your community, then investigate that topic in two different ways. First, Google the topic and its impact on your community, and learn what you can from reliable sources you find there. Next, bring up the topic with someone in your community who has been affected by or has experience with it, and record what you learn.

A stylized illustration of a web browser window. At the top, there is a search bar with the text "www." and a right-pointing arrow. Below the search bar, the word "Google" is written in its characteristic multi-colored font. The browser window is set against a white background with a light blue border.

An illustration of a woman with dark hair, wearing a white shirt and a dark skirt, reading a newspaper. She has a thoughtful expression, with her hand near her chin. Three yellow circles of varying sizes are floating around her head, suggesting ideas or information. The illustration is set against a white background with a light blue border.

How do these stories or information compare and contrast?

What did you learn that you can't Google?
